

Special Issue on Mental Health and Interpersonal Relationship

Call for Papers

Close relationships are sometimes called interpersonal relationships. The closest relationships are most often found with family and a small circle of best friends. Interpersonal relationships require the most effort to nurture and maintain. These are also the relationships that give you the most joy and satisfaction. An interpersonal relationship is an association between two or more people that may range from fleeting to enduring. The goal of this special issue is to provide a platform for scientists and academicians all over the world to promote, share, and discuss various new issues and developments in the area of mental health and interpersonal relationship.

In this special issue, we invite front-line researchers and authors to submit original research and review articles that explore mental health and interpersonal relationship. In this special issue, potential topics include, but are not limited to:

- Positive relationship
- Interpersonal skills
- Neurobiology of interpersonal connections
- Intimate relationship
- Adult attachment
- Benefits of satisfying relationships
- Qualities of good & bad relationships
- Types of interpersonal relationships
- Confirming and valuing relationship theory

Authors should read over the journal's For Authors carefully before submission. Prospective authors should submit an electronic copy of their complete manuscript through the journal's Paper Submission System.

Please kindly specify the “Special Issue” under your manuscript title. The research field “Special Issue – Mental Health and Interpersonal Relationship” should be selected during your submission.

Special Issue timetable:

Submission Deadline	March 28th, 2018
Publication Date	May 2018

Guest Editor:

For further questions or inquiries
Please contact Editorial Assistant at psych@scirp.org