

Special Issue on Constitutionalism and the Rule of Law

Call for Papers

Constitutionalism and the Rule of Law is a core field of legal and political studies concerned with the principles, institutions, and practices that limit governmental power and ensure accountability through a supreme legal framework. It examines the design, interpretation, and enforcement of constitutions, the separation of powers, judicial independence, and the protection of fundamental rights and freedoms. Central to this field is the rule of law, which requires that laws be publicly promulgated, equally applied, and independently adjudicated, thereby safeguarding legal certainty and preventing arbitrary governance. Comparative and international perspectives further explore how constitutional norms evolve across different legal systems and respond to social, political, and technological change.

In this special issue, we intend to invite front-line researchers and authors to submit original research and review articles on exploring Constitutionalism and the Rule of Law. Potential topics include, but are not limited to:

- Comparative constitutional law
- Constitutional amendment and reform
- Constitutional courts and judicial independence
- Constitutional interpretation and hermeneutics
- Constitutional responses to social and technological change
- Constitutional theory and principles
- Constitutionalism and good governance
- Constitutionalism in international and transnational law
- Democratic governance and constitutional design
- Emergency powers and constitutional limits
- Federalism and decentralization
- Fundamental rights and civil liberties
- Human rights protection mechanisms
- Judicial review and constitutional adjudication
- Rule of law theory and practice
