Special Issue on
Translation Studies and English Interpreting
Call for Papers

Translation Studies and English Interpreting is an interdisciplinary field that explores the theory, practice, and pedagogy of translating written texts and interpreting spoken communication between English and other languages. It examines linguistic, cultural, cognitive, and technological aspects of translation and interpreting, including strategies for accuracy, equivalence, and context adaptation. By integrating applied linguistics, cross-cultural communication, professional practice, and translation technologies, this field aims to enhance effective multilingual communication, support global interactions, and foster understanding across diverse cultural and social settings.

In this special issue, we intend to invite front-line researchers and authors to submit original research and review articles on exploring Translation Studies and English Interpreting. Potential topics include, but are not limited to:

- Literary translation
- Technical and scientific translation
- Legal and judicial translation
- Medical and healthcare translation
- Audiovisual translation (subtitling, dubbing, media)
- Conference and consecutive interpreting
- Simultaneous interpreting
- Community and liaison interpreting
- Translation theory and research
- Cross-cultural communication studies
- Machine translation and translation technologies
- Terminology management and localization
- Translation pedagogy and training
- Corpus-based translation studies
- Ethics and professional standards in translation
- Multilingual communication and globalization

Authors should read over the journal's For Authors carefully before submission. Prospective authors should submit an electronic copy of their complete manuscript through the journal's Paper Submission System.
