

Special Issue on
Language, Culture, and Pedagogical Practices

Call for Papers

Language, Culture, and Pedagogical Practices is an interdisciplinary field that examines how linguistic forms and cultural contexts shape teaching, learning, and educational interaction. It explores the role of language in knowledge construction, classroom communication, curriculum design, and assessment, while recognizing culture as a key factor influencing values, identities, learning styles, and power relations in educational settings. Drawing on applied linguistics, sociolinguistics, anthropology, and educational theory, the field emphasizes culturally responsive pedagogy, multilingual education, and inclusive teaching practices. Its goal is to enhance educational equity, learner engagement, and effective instruction across diverse linguistic and cultural contexts.

In this special issue, we intend to invite front-line researchers and authors to submit original research and review articles on exploring Language, Culture, and Pedagogical Practices. Potential topics include, but are not limited to:

- Applied linguistics in education
- Assessment and evaluation in diverse contexts
- Classroom discourse and interaction
- Culturally responsive pedagogy
- Curriculum design and cultural relevance
- Educational ethnography and classroom research
- Identity, power, and ideology in education
- Inclusive and equitable teaching practices
- Indigenous and minority language education
- Intercultural communication in education
- Language policy and educational planning
- Literacy development across cultures
- Multilingual and bilingual education
