Special Issue on English Language and Communication

Call for Papers

English Language and Communication explores the structure, use, teaching, and social functions of the English language in diverse contexts. It examines how individuals and communities communicate through spoken, written, digital, and multimodal forms of English, with a focus on language learning, discourse, intercultural interaction, and professional communication. The field integrates perspectives from linguistics, education, media studies, and communication research to understand language practices and their impact on society. As English continues to serve as a global language, studies in English Language and Communication contribute to improving language proficiency, fostering effective communication, and enhancing cross-cultural understanding in academic, professional, and international settings.

In this special issue, we intend to invite front-line researchers and authors to submit original research and review articles on exploring English Language and Communication. Potential topics include, but are not limited to:

- Applied linguistics
- English language teaching
- Second language acquisition
- Language assessment
- English for specific purposes
